NEWS FROM THE COUNTRY

TAMWORTH.

A very sad accident occurred on Wednesday evening, March 27th, which has cast a gloom over the whole community. Mr. Edward Corran, harness-maker, left his shop at six o'clock and went to his home to do his chores as usual. While watering his colt the animal got away from him and it is supposed he fell, and that as he fell the colt kicked him on the head inflicting a terrible wound. His skull was broken and the brain lacerated. It is not known exactly how it happened as no one saw the blow dealt. He was found a few minutes afterwards lying face down in the snow, his head bleeding profusely. Drs. Clark and Wilson were summoned and all that medical skill could do was done for him but without avail. He lingered until Sunday afternoon, when he passed quietly away. Deceased was 37 years of age and leaves a wife and three children, two sons and one daughter. He was a quiet, steady and industrious man and respected by all who knew him. The funeral which took place on Tuesday morning was one of the largest ever seen in this township. Rev. J. R. Serson conducted the burial services in Christ church. He was a member of the order of Workmen and Select Knights. He also was a Mason, having first joined that order in Montreal from which place he came, when he came to live here. His last request was to be buried under the order of the Workmen and a goodly number of the order turned out. All the members did not get the word. A few from Centreville lodge came. The family have the deep sympathy of all in their sad affliction.

FAIR VIEW.

What has become of the reporter of the last two or three weeks, I presume when our esteemed grower, grower of small fruit and garden sass, had the tip over and received such a pair of black eyes. "Oh Charley," it is a good thing you do not indulge in poor whiskey or stale beer, or the neighbors might talk you know. I see the correspondent of the Whig from "Fair View" must have been drinking sour sap from some neighboring bush to think they have the only place in the vicinity that has a fence around it and all the rest is open to commons.

Our esteemed friend Captain Bartley has finished drawing the material of Noah's Ark. He says it is a barn, but the writer thinks it will be some time before he can let the dove out in the spring of the year "Moral" build higher and drier, and be sure.

Visitors:—Stanley Files Esq., of Victoria street, was visiting at Chas. Lowry, "Tree down Place" on Sunday last. Stacey Vanalstine visiting river road Sunday last.

Conundrum:—Why is it that any person visiting at "Tree down Place" on Sunday, is never reported in Fair View correspondence?

THE EAST.

The complaint laid before Police Magistrate Daly by the Rev. Mr. Sagar against Mr. Nelson Sharp for disturbing the religious meetings of the Free Methodists in the school house at Violet, on Sunday, March 17th, came up for a hearing last week, and the case has since been dismissed. Sharpe is the caretaker of the Violet school house and he had been authorized by a resolution of the school board to allow no public meetings in the building. On these instructions he ejected the preacher and his congregation from the school house on the 17th of March. The preacher laid a complaint against Sharpe for disturbing a religious meeting, and Sharpe retaliated by putting in a contrary charge of trespassing against Mr. Sagar, with the result as stated.

The Disease Disappears in Three Weeks by the Use of B.B.B.—Letter from Manitoba Fully Describing It.

DEAR SIR,—During the winter of 1892-93, I was covered with Pimples on the inside of my right leg between the knee and the ankle. As I never had anything of the kind before I was anxious about it, and sought medical advice, but getting no relief from the doctor I tried a bottle of B.B.B., applying some of it to my leg as well as using it internally, and to my surprise the nasty disease, whatever it was, disappeared within three weeks, and I am thankful to say it has never re-appeared.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND MAKES PEOPLE WELL

Thankful People Everywhere Gladly Endorse the Great Medicine

It is a Blessing to the Whole Canadian Dominion.

PHYSICIANS ACKNOWLEDGE ITS GREAT CURING VIRTUES

IT MAKES STRONG NERVES AND PURE BLOOD.

It Cures Diseases and Long-standing Troubles.

An Ontario Man Strongly Testifies.

"I am a living witness to the worth of Paine's Celery Compound."
This is the statement of Mr. G. J. Smye of Sheffield, Ont.
It makes people well!
This fact is so widely known and so fully borne out by thousands of magnificent cures, that the simple statement is in itself sufficient.
The whole Dominion has been blessed by the marvellous work of the great medicine, and an army of rescued and saved men and women bless the noble discoverer, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., L. L. D.
Master minds amongst the medical men of the present day readily acknowledge the potent and curing virtues of Paine's Celery Compound. They find that it makes strong nerves and pure blood, two essentials necessary for perfect health and strength.
Long-standing troubles and diseases are cured by Paine's Celery Compound when all other medical agencies fail in their work. For kidney and liver troubles, it is the infallible remedy. Nervous debility, exhaustion, sleeplessness and headaches are quickly swept away by the curing powers of Paine's Celery Compound.

necessity, recuperate lost strength, and gain the heartfulness so necessary to make life pleasurable for the summer. All should bear in mind the fact that Paine's Celery Compound "makes people well."
The following letter from Mr. G. J. Smye, of Sheffield, Ont., speaks of a wonderful cure after all ordinary means had failed to do the work:—
"It is with great pleasure that I testify to the value of your great medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. For nearly two years I suffered from indigestion, kidney and liver troubles. After trying several medicines that did not effect a cure, I decided to try your Compound. Before using it I was so low in health that I could not eat or sleep. I could not lie in bed owing to pain in my back; it was only by resting on elbows and knees I was enabled to obtain a slight degree of ease. Before I had fully taken one bottle of your medicine I began to improve. I have in all taken fourteen bottles with grand results. I am a farmer and am now working every day. Anyone may refer to me in regard to those statements, or to any of my neighbors around Sheffield, where I am well known. I am a living witness to the worth of Paine's Celery

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, APRIL 5, 1895.

The Beaver's whine that our manufacturing industries cannot live without protection is as pitiful as it is false and demeaning to the workmen of Canada.

The Belleville Intelligencer on Monday informed its readers that "there is no duty on brains." Its subscribers, aged residents and old friends of the family, are wondering why in thunder the editor of that paper doesn't take advantage of this laxity of the N. P. tariff and put in a stock.

By the statesmanlike conduct of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, the great Lord Highinkadink of the Bowell Ministry, a national catastrophe has been averted. He resigned his position in the Cabinet for three days, but we are pleased to inform our readers that he is again at his desk controlling the destinies of his beloved country, and drawing his salary of $8,000 a year as heretofore.

In reply to the question "Has the N. P. increased the standard of morality?" the Belleville Intelligencer doesn't "know what the increasing of the standard of morality may mean." The increasing of the standard of morality will mean a cessation of the boodling and corruption that has characterized the actions of the authors of the N. P. It will mean that the people of Canada will assert their manliness and repudiate with scorn the offer of a post office or any public works as a bribe for their votes. The introduction of the N. P. has had a degenerating influence on the people of Canada. It has fostered combines, and the controllers of these combines have contributed large sums of money to bribe and debauch the electorate, thereby securing the election of men who act as their factotums in Parliament and legislate in their interest and against the interests of the majority. The N. P. has rendered possible the election to Parliament of men who allowed such work as the Curran Bridge job, the Connolly-McGreavy peculations, and the thousand and one acts of corruption that has so lowered Canada in the estimation of outside nations. Raising the standard of morality in Canada means the abolition of the N. P. and the defeat of the present corrupt Government.

The duties on Yankee beef, pork, cheese oats, corn, and other products of the farm have been of enormous benefit to the farmer.—Belleville Intelligencer.

The above is part of the beautiful Tory home market fable that we hear so much about. It is not quite as glowing but every bit as reliable as the elder Tupper's rosy picture in the prehistoric days of the N. P. when in fervid eloquence he depicted how the N. P. was to cause tall chimneys to loom up in every village and township in the Dominion. The farmers were to be kept busy hauling produce to feed the teeming millions engaged in the factories which these tall chimneys surmounted. It was a pretty picture, but it lacked one thing to make it complete—the tall chimneys failed to materialize. The home mar-

A POST CARD.

To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.
Dear Sir,—From an unknown source I have received a post card containing the following, which is well worth a wider circulation than post cards to "five" as the writer suggests:
"In the name of our common country send a copy of the following to five of your friends, as I have done, repeating this request."

"The possible extension of other industries besides agriculture is due to the success with which agriculture itself is practised. * * * It is only as the art of agriculture is exercised with increasing effect that the number of those not so engaged can be increased."—J. E. T. Rogers, Preface to 'Wealth of Nations.'

Experience teaches that Protection discourages agriculture, even where land is free and plentiful as in Canada. From 1881 to 1891 the number of farmers in Canada decreased 7000. During the same period the population of towns increased 38 per cent., hence the depression. Farm land values appreciated down to 1879, the year protection was introduced, since then they have fallen in value 40 per cent.

"Had human institutions therefore never disturbed the natural course of things the progressive wealth and increase of the towns would in every political society be consequential and in proportion to the improvement and cultivation of the territory or country."—Adam Smith.

Protection is the "human institution" referred to here. A revenue tariff when in force in Canada did not "disturb the natural course of things." A return to a revenue tariff would therefore restore farm land values, encourage the extension of agriculture, and widen the home and foreign market for the products and manufactures natural to the country."

The above, Mr. Editor, was all on one post card, and if the unknown writer of it is not a Patron of Industry he is evidently good enough for one. Let the press pass on his extracts from Rogers and Adam Smith and his comments thereon. Yours, etc.,
ALLEN PRINGLE.

A Good Thing is Always Desirable.

So it is with the visits of Prof. Dorenwend to Napanee. On his last visit he was so busy that many ladies and gentlemen were unable to be attended to. He is therefore returning to give all who desire it another opportunity of procuring his art goods for the head. Prof Dorenwend is undoubtedly one of the leaders of his profession on this continent—his skill in arranging the coverings for the head is well known. His goods are acknowledged to be perfect and in every way true to nature. They are the best protection to the head besides giving a refined and youthful expression to the face. Call and examine these marvels of his art and have them fitted in order to judge of the effect. Consult him about your hair, he will, free of charge, give you advice as to the preservation of it. He will be at the Paisley House on Wednesday 10th April, 1895.

NOTES ABOUT WOMEN.

The training given in schools and colleges is not the only evidence of physical growth of the American young woman. The numerous athletic clubs belonging wholly or in part to women are the best proof that they are turning their attention to vigorous, healthful exercise. There is not a popular sport, with the exception of baseball and football, in which the young women do not indulge. Racket, lawn tennis, fencing, bowling, horseback riding, rowing, bicycling, fox hunting and other sports that were once restricted to men are all freely followed by young women, and with a zest that shows how keenly they are enjoyed. The interest displayed in horse-shows is another evidence of the relish American young women have in outdoor sports. All these facts, and many others showing that the American girl is not the pallid hot-house flower she once was should be known to every one who attempts to speak on the matter.

A writer in an English magazine recently said on this subject: "Outdoor life, delight in action, the spirit of sport have taken hold of American womanhood. Girls of strong, active physique, erect carriage and energetic spirit, delighting in tennis, riding, boating, walking are now the rule. The feeble, indoor do-nothing is the exception, and the result is a tall, vigorous race with free steps and cheeks aglow with the ruddy color of physical health and energy. Walk along the avenue of New York, Boston, Chicago or any large city at the fashionable hours, and the procession of bright animated girlhood which passes before one's eyes gives ample proof of summer activity in the country and city work in gymnasium and riding-school."

The thoroughbred girl has carried off all the honors this season. In some cases she has been rich, and in others poor, but always simple, unaffected, wholesome and sensible. She has received attention as her due, and cannot be said to have lifted a finger from first to last to attract it. She took her place in society with serene dignity and amiability. She was just as nice to the humble as to the great. She has shown none of the petty jealousy peculiar to underbred and overdressed women. All the men agree that she is as nice as she is refined, and add: "Such a lady!" She is a charming illustration of the fact that a girl's suc-

After considerable discussion the matter was disposed of as follows:

That the following question be submitted to the town solicitor for his written opinion: If the licensee for the sale of fresh meat claims that parties are selling fresh meat without a license and contrary to the by-law, whose duty is it to prosecute said parties, the chief of police for the town, or the licensee?

cess in Washington society depend more upon her manners, cultivation and disposition than anything else. The thoroughbred girl who has the advantage of money has, of course, greater opportunities of doing nice, kind things than she would have when poor; but it is always within her power to make herself an admired and lovable personality, rich or poor.

WOMEN OF TO-DAY.

The oldest woman in North Carolina is said to be Mrs. Catherine Beshares. Her exact age is not known, but it is supposed to be between 115 and 120 years.

Could never shake hands. She declares it to be the most vulgar form of salutation. As soon as she enters a room she makes for a seat. Once seated she will not budge until she takes her leave.

Dublin has a new paper called 'To-day's Woman.' It is edited and written by a group of talented women, many of whom are university graduates.

Barnard College for Women has just received from a woman anonymous a second gift of $100,000 toward erecting the college building in the neighborhood of the new site of Columbia College.

One marriage a week of an American girl to a German army officer is the average. The latest betrothal reported is that of Miss Annie Heacock, niece of Clement Griscom, of Philadelphia, to Lieutenant von Megide.

A New York widow, in looking over her late husband's effects, found an old savings fund book having but a single deposit for $5, dated 1820. She laid claim to the money, and, to her surprise, found that the principal and accumulated interest amounted to $248.

The Empress Eugenie is engaged on a volume of recollections. The proceeds of the sale will be given to the fund for the widows of French soldiers killed in the Franco-German war. An English translation will be published at the same time as the French.

Mrs. Sarah Thomas of Burryport, Llanelly, who last year received a check of £5 6s from the Princess of Wales, or a shilling for each natal anniversary, celebrated on February 5th her 107th birthday. She is in possession of all her faculties and is a very amusing conversationalist.

FASHION NOTES.

What to wear about her neck is the all-important question to the girl of fashion. She appreciates the importance of dressing her neck becomingly, and is, therefore, giving the subject much thought. The shops are helping her to solve the problem with the array of dainty neck adornments they are now displaying.

The flower boa is, perhaps, the latest novelty. It is made of flowers which seem almost fragrant in their naturalness. The boa of sweet peas is an exquisite fancy. The sweet pea blossoms are in varying shades of pinkish white and violet. They are fastened to a foundation of periwinkle satin ribbon, which is arranged at the side in dashing loops to give a soft effect.

Flower boas of butterfly tips mounted on black ribbon are effective, worn with a black gown and a little tique of black velvet and buttercups to match. The boa of mignonette, with knots of baby blue velvet here and there and fastened in front with a big velvet bow is another novelty. High plaings of ribbon caught with clusters of tiny flowers make a fetching boa to wear with a spring gown.

A ruche of lace combined with flowers is another new fancy. Full-blown roses and poppies are the flowers most used for these boas. Many of the new boas have the stole effect which is generally produced by jeweled ribbon or sometimes two fluffy scarfs of chiffon fall well over the gown.

With these pretty caprices a woman can make the plainest frock presentable, and enliven a morning costume so that it could never be told from one especially devised for the theatre or other occasions of ceremony.

That Great Purchase OF DRESS GOODS

ADVERTISED for last Saturday arrived too late—only came on Monday Afternoon. 5,018 yards of all kinds and qualities of Dress Goods, from the low grade goods, worth 10 and 12½ cents, to wool repps, merinos, poplinettes, and silk poplins, worth from 35 to 90 cents a yard. Just as we anticipated, it has proved the Dress Goods Bargain Sensation of the district, and of this cheap age in which we live. It is said “a woman dearly loves a bargain.” We believe it, judging from the crowds of happy ladies around these dress goods tables, and the avidity with which these dress bargains are being seized upon.

CHAPTER XIII.

The middle of the day is past before one by one they straggle down. Breakfast awaits each new comer, hot and tempting. Trix eats hers with a relish, but Edith looks fagged and spiritless. If people are to be supernaturally brilliant and bright, dashing and fascinating all night long, people must expect to pay the penalty next day, when lassitude and reaction set in.

"My poor Edith!" Mr. Charles Stuart remarks, "you do look most awfully used up. What a pity for their peace of mind, some of your frantic adorers of last night can't see you now. Let me recommend you to go back to bed and try an S. and B."

"An 'S. and B.?' Edith repeats vaguely. "Soda and Brandy. It's the thing, depend upon it, for such a case as yours. I've been seedy myself before now, and know what I'm talking about. I'll mix it for you, if you like."

There is a copy of Tennyson, in blue and gold, beside Miss Darrell, and Miss Darrell's reply is to fling it at Mr. Stuart's head. It is a last effort of expiring nature; she sinks back exhausted among her cushions. Charley departs to enjoy his Manilla out under the waving trees, and Sir Victor, looking fresh and recuperated, strolls in and bends over her.

"My dear Edith," he says, "how pale you are this morning—how tired you look. If one ball is going to exhaust you like this, how will you stand the wear and tear of London seasons in the blissful time to come?"

"I will grow used to it, I dare say. 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.'"

He smiles and bends lower, drawing one long brown silken tress of hair fondly through his fingers, feeling as though he would like to stoop and kiss the pale, weary face. But Trix is over yonder, pretending to read, and kissing is not to be thought of.

"I am going over to Catherine Royals," he whispers; "suppose you come—the walk will do you good. I am giving orders about the fitting up of the old place. Did I tell you the workmen came yesterday?"

"Yes; you told me."

"Shall I ring for your hat and parasol? Do come, Edith."

"Excuse me, Sir Victor," Edith answers, with an impatient motion. "I feel too tired—too lazy, which ever you like—to stir. Some other day I will go with pleasure."

He turns to leave her with a disappointed face. Edith closes her eyes and takes an easier position among the pillows. The door closes behind him; Trix flings down her book and bursts forth:

"Of all the heartless, cold-blooded animals, I have never seen a good fortune to meet, commend me to Edith Darrell!"

The dark eyes unclose and look up at her.

"My dear Trix! what's the matter with you now? What new enormity have I committed?"

"Oh, nothing new—nothing new at all," is Trix's scornful response; "it is quite in keeping with the rest of your conduct. To be purely and entirely selfish is the normal state of the future Lady Catherine! Poor Sir Victor! who has won you. Poor Charley! who has lost you. I hardly know which I pity most."

"I don't see that you need waste your precious pity on either," answered Edith, perfectly unmoved by Miss Stuart's vituperation; "keep it for me. I shall make Sir Victor a very good wife as wives go, and for Charley—well, Lady Gwendoline is left to console him."

"Yes, of course, there is Lady Gwendoline. O Edith! Edith! what are you made of? How can you sell yourself as you are going to do? Sir Victor Catherine is no more to you than his ball-porter. You love my brother and yet you hand him over to Lady Gwendoline. Come, Edith, be honest for once; you love Charley, don't you?"

"It is rather late in the day for such tender confessions as that," Edith replies, with a reckless sort of laugh; "but yes—if the declaration does you any good, Trix—I love Charley."

"And you give him up! Miss Darrell I give you up as a conundrum I can't solve. Rank and title are all very well—nobody thinks more of them than I do; but if I loved a man," cried Trix, with kindling eyes and glowing cheeks. "I'd marry him! Yes, I would, though he were a beggar."

Edith looked up at her kindly with a smothered sigh.

"I believe you, Trix; but then you are different from me." She half raised herself, looking dreamily out on the sunlit prospect any one came in, the servants, or held—Sir Victor."

He laughed contemptuously, and order her still.

"Yes, Edith; suppose Sir Victor came in and saw his bride-elect with a sacrilegious arm about her waist? Suppose I told him the truth—that you are mine, not his; mine by the love that alone makes marriage holy; his for his title and his rent-roll—bought and sold. By Heaven! I half wish he would!"

Was this Charley—Charley Stuart?

She caught her breath—her pride and her insolence dropping from her—only a girl in the grasp of the man she loves. In that moment, if he had willed it, he could have made her forego her plight, and pledge herself to him wholly, and he knew it.

"Edith," he said, "as I stand and look at you, in your beauty and your selfishness, I could hardly know whether I love or despise you most. I could make you marry me—make you, mind—but you are not worth it. Go!" He opened his arms contemptuously and released her. "You'll not be a bad wife for Sir Victor, I dare say, as fashionable wives go. You'll be that ornament of society, a married flirt, but you'll never run away with his dearest friend, and make a case for the D. C. A week ago I envied Sir Victor with all my heart—to-day I pity him with all my soul!"

He turned to go, for once in his life, thoroughly aroused, passionate love, passionate rage at war with him. She had sunk back upon the sofa, her face hidden in her hands, humbled, as in all her proud life she had never been humbled before. Her silence, her humbly touched him. He heard a stifled sob, and all his hot anger died out in pained remorse.

"Oh, forgive me, Edith," he said, "forgive me. It may be cruel, but I had to speak. It is the first, it will be the last time. I am selfish, too, or I would never have pained you—better never hear the truth than that the hearing should make you miserable. Don't cry, Edith; I can't bear it. Forgive me, my cousin—they are the last tears I will ever make you shed."

The words he meant to soothe her, hurt more deeply than the words he meant to wound. "They are the last tears I will ever make you shed!" An eternal farewell was in the words. She heard the door open, heard it close, and knew that her love and her life had parted in that instant forever.

"You might tell him, Charley," Edith says. "I shouldn't mind much, and he might jilt me—who can tell? I think it would do us both good."

"I don't understand you, Edith," he says. "I feel like asking you the same question Trix did. Why do you marry Sir Victor?"

"Why do I marry him?" she repeated.

"Well—a little because of his handsome face and stately bearing, and the triumph of carrying off a prize, for which Lady Gwendoline and half a score more have battled. A little because he pleads so eloquently, and loves me as no other mortal man did, or ever will; and oh! Charley, a great deal because he is Sir Victor Catherine of Catherine Royals, with a rent-roll of twenty thousand a year. I like him—who could help it; but love him—no!" She clasped her hands above her head, and gazed dreamily out at the sparkling sunlit scene. "I shall be very fond of him, very proud of him, when I am his wife—that I know. And on my wedding day, or perhaps a day or two before, you and I shall shake hands, sir, and see each other no more."

"No more?" he repeats.

"Well, for a year or two at least, until all the folly of the past can be remembered only as a thing to be laughed at. Or until there is a tall, handsome Mrs. Stuart, or, more likely, a Lady Gwendoline Stuart. And Charley," speaking hurriedly now, and not meeting the deep gray eyes she knows are fixed upon her, "the locket with my picture and the letters—you won't want them then—suppose you let me have them back."

"I won't want them then, certainly," Charley responds, "if by 'then' you mean when I am the husband of the tall, fascinating Mrs. Stuart or Lady Gwendoline. But as I have not that happiness yet, suppose you allow me to retain them until I have. Sir Victor will never know, and he would not mind much if he did. We are cousins, are we not? and what more natural than that cousins once removed should keep each other's pictures? By the bye, I see you still wear that little trumpy pearl and turquoise brooch I gave you, with my photo at the back. Give it to me, Edie; turquoise does not become your brown skin, my dear, and I'll give you a ruby pin with Sir Victor's instead."

He stretched out his hand to unfasten it. She sprang back, her cheeks flushing at his touch.

"You shall not have it! Married or single, I shall keep it to my dying day if I choose. Charley—what do you mean, sir! How dare you? Let me go!"

For he had risen suddenly and caught her in his arms, looking steadily down into her dark eyes, with a gaze she could not meet. Whilst he held her, whilst he looked at her, he was her master, and he knew it.

"Charley, let me go!" she pleaded. "If any one came in, the servants, or held—Sir Victor."

He laughed contemptuously, and order her still.

"Yes, Edith; suppose Sir Victor came in and saw his bride-elect with a sacrilegious arm about her waist? Suppose I told him the truth—that you are mine, not his; mine by the love that alone makes marriage holy; his for his title and his rent-roll—bought and sold. By Heaven! I half wish he would!"

CHAPTER XIV.

Two weeks later five of Lady Helena's guests departed. The Stuart family, with the devoted Captain Hammond in Trix's train, went up to London; Miss Edith Darrell stayed behind.

Since the memorable day following the ball, the bride-elect of Sir Victor Catherine had dwelt in a sort of earthly purgatory. She had given up Charley—had cast him off, had battered herself in cold blood—for a title and an income. And now that he held her at her true value, that his love had died a natural death in contempt and scorn, her whole soul craved him with a sick longing that was like death. Jealousy had been added to her other torments; he was ever by Lady Gwendoline's side of late—ever at Drexel Court. His father had set his heart upon the match; she was graceful and high-bred; it would end in a marriage, no doubt.

"What a dog in the manger I grow," she said, with a bitter laugh. "I won't have him myself, and I cannot bear that any one else should have him."

She was losing flesh and color, waxing wan as a shadow. Sir Victor was full of concern, full of wonder and alarm.

"The sooner my guests go, the better," thought Lady Helena. "The sooner she sees the last of this young man, the sooner health and strength will return."

Perhaps Charley saw too. It was he, at all events, who urged theodus to London.

"Let us see a little London life in the season, governor," he said. "Lady Portia Hampton, and that lot, are going. They'll introduce us to some nice people—so will Hammond. I pine for stone and mortar, and the fog and smoke of London."

Whatever he may have felt, he bore it easily to all outward seeming, as the men who feel deepest mostly do. He could not be said to actually avoid her, but certainly since that afternoon in the drawing-room, they had never been for five seconds alone.

"And, my dear child," said Lady Helena to Edith, when the departure was fixed, "I think you had much better remain behind."

There was an emphasis in her tone, a meaning in her eye, that brought the conscious blood to the girl's cheeks.

Street that evening. Calling upon old friends kept the gallant captain of Scotch Grays occupied all day; and as the shades of evening began to gather over the West End he stood impatiently awaiting his arrival. Mr. Stuart was ten minutes late, and if there was one thing in this mortal life that upset the young warrior's equanimity, it was being kept ten minutes waiting for his dinner. Five minutes more! Confound the fellow—would he never come? As the impatient adjutant passed the captain's lips, Charley came in. He was rather pale. Except for that, there was no change in him. Death itself could hardly have wrought much change in Charley. He had not come to apologize; he had not come to dine. He had come to tell the captain some very bad news. There had been terrible commercial disasters of late in New York; they had involved his father. This morning he had received a cable message, telling him the crash had come. He was irrevocably, past all redemption, ruined.

Captain Hammond, smoking a cigar, listened in gloomy silence, feeling particularly uncomfortable, and not knowing in the least what to say. He took out his cheroot and spoke at last.

"It's a deuced bad state of affairs, Charley. Have you thought of anything?"

"I've thought of suicide," Charley answered, "and made all the preliminary arrangements. I took out my razor-case, examined the edges, and found the sharpest, and—put it carefully away again."

"How did your mother and sister take it?" Captain Hammond gloomily asked.

"My mother is one of those happy-go-lucky, apathetic sort of people who never break their hearts over anything. She said, 'O dear me!' several times, I believe, and cried a little. Trix hasn't time to 'take it' at all. She is absorbed all day in attending her father. The fit turns out not to be dangerous at present, but he lies in a sort of stupor. Of course our first step will be to return to New York immediately. I called this afternoon upon the London agent of the Cunard ships, and found that one sails in four days. Providentially two cabins remained untaken; I secured them at once. In four days, then, we sail. Meantime, old fellow, if you'll drop in and speak a word to mother and Trix, you will be doing a friendly deed. Poor souls! they are awfully out of it."

Captain Hammond started to his feet. He seized Charley's hand in a grip of iron. "Old boy!" he began—he never got further. The torrent of eloquence dried up suddenly, and a shake of the hand that made Charley wince and finished the sentence.

"I shall be fully occupied in the meantime," Charley said, taking his hat and turning to go, "and they'll be a great deal alone. If I can find time I'll run down to Cheshire, and tell my cousin. As we may not meet again, I should like to say 'good-by.' He departed.

There was no sleep that night in the Stuart apartments. Mr. Stuart was pronounced out of danger and able to travel, but he still lay in that lethargic trance—not speaking at all, and seemingly not suffering. Next day Charley started for Cheshire.

"She doesn't deserve it," his sister said bitterly; "I wouldn't go if I were you. She has her lover—her fortune. What are we or our misfortunes to her? She has neither heart, nor gratitude, nor affection. She isn't worth a thought, and never was—there!"

"I wouldn't be too hard on her, Trix, if I were you," her brother answered coolly. "You would have taken Sir Victor yourself, you know, if you could have got him. I will go."

He went. The long, bright summer day passed; at six he was in Chester. There was some delay in procuring a conveyance to Powys Place. Lamps glimmered in the windows of the old stone mansion as he alighted.

The servant started as he ushered him in, at his pale face and dusty garments.

"You will tell Miss Darrell I wish to see her at once, and alone," he said, slipping a shilling into the man's hand.

He took a seat in the familiar reception-room, and waited. Would she keep him long, he wondered—would she come to him—would she come at all? Yes, he knew she would, let him send for her, married or single, when and how he might, he knew she would come.

She entered as the thought crossed his mind, hastily, with a soft silken rustle, a waft of perfume. He rose up and looked at her; so for the space of five seconds they stood silent, face to face.

To the last hour of his life Charley Stuart remembered her, as he saw her then, and always with a sharp pang of the same pain.

She was dressed for a dinner party. She

PRETTY EASTER GIFTS

DAINTY LITTLE THINGS APPROPRIATE TO THE OCCASION.

How to Transform Eggshells into Ornaments—Vases and Bonbonnières Made in Charming Designs—Caricatures That Will be Amusing to Young and Old.

Easter has become almost equally with Christmas in many families a day of gladness and gift-giving, while the custom should never be allowed to become a cause of expense ill to be borne, it is quite possible for everybody, high and low, to bring a little extra good feeling into the household by simple remembrances all around.

It is true that many a mother has nothing better to hand than a few eggs, but some of the most popular Easter gifts for children have been made from eggshells; likewise some of the daintiest for a fastidious friend; and a few hours have been enough time to make dozens of little offerings.

Countless are the conceits and none are elaborate. In the simpler forms the eggs are swiftly colored in rainbow hues with aniline dyes, then daintily etched with a sharp-pointed knife; or they are coated with metallic paints; or they are frosted with diamond dust. For decorating by whatever method the eggs are either hard-boiled or the contents are blown by means of a tiny hole at either end and then finished with narrow ribbons for hanging.

An exquisite greeting is this bit of naure's porcelain when transformed into a vase and filled with violets. The support for the vase is made of three pieces of bronzed wire, each three inches long, twisted together in the form of a tripod.

To make a vase, carefully break off the smaller end of the shell. Leave the edges jagged and gild them heavily. Decorate the outer shell with tiny sprigs of blue flowers in oil. A dainty bit of white and blue china is the result.

By tinting the shell a delicate yellow, gilding the jagged edges of the opening and then adding light designs in red and gold lines, the vase is suggestive of Royal Worcester.

A great variety of vases can be made. They should in every case be filled with dainty spring flowers.

Prior to the application of paints to the shell, it must be well washed, thoroughly dried, and rubbed with benzine. After this treatment there is no more difficulty in painting on eggshells than on paper.

THE BONBONNIERES.

Egg bonbonnières, filled with choice confections, are welcome gifts to anyone, but they are especially suitable as presents to little friends.

Boil large eggs very hard. With a dies in pale and deep green, lined with sweet grass, is a delicious nest for colored eggs.

An artistic fancy is a straw basket twined and lined with smilax and filled with none but frosted eggs. The effect of glistening white from the soft, refreshing green is charming. To the handle is tied a white satin ribbon on which is printed in gold an Easter greeting.

THE COMICAL EGGS.

But it is the egg caricatures that delight and amaze the little ones. The egg is blown and the shell cleaned and rubbed with benzine.

Fig. 1 shows the general style and features of two extremes—a sage and a dunce. Success depends upon the markings in sepia, which are few but striking. The eyes are either blue or brown. The lips and ears are red. The hair and beard are of fine cotton, glued in position. A cord tied to a splint, slipped through the hole through which the egg was blown, suspends these curious heads.

A nameless bird is seen in Fig. 2. The eggshell body is tinted brown. The neck and head are of pasteboard, glued to the body, and likewise tinted. Bright beads are glued on to serve as eyes. The feet are of bent wire. The claws must be of sufficient length to insure a firm support. A wonderful comb, tail and wings are of gorgeous feathers glued in place. The feathers are brightened with touches of gold and silver paint. The bird always proves a great success.

Fig. 3 shows a mischievous Dame Grundy. The head is an eggshell properly marked. The body is an English walnut, on which the head is made to rest by means of sealing wax or drippings from a wax candle. The arms and skirt are of stiff paper. The little gossiping dame is gowned and capped in tissue paper. She may be made to stand by spreading the stiff underskirt, or she may be suspended by a string running from the body through the head.

A right jolly little fellow can be modeled from Fig. 4. His body and head are eggshells. These are joined by slipping the splint with a string into the body shell and extending the cord up through the head. Features are painted in grotesque expression. The hair is of cotton, arms and limbs of pasteboard. The whole is painted a brilliant red, with trimmings in gold.

Pen-wipers for older children are made by decorating ordinary eggshells like heads. Effective models are those of a sweet-faced nun, a pretty student, with characteristic "mortar-board" hat, or a dear, smiling baby in lace-trimmed cap. The shell head is securely glued to a support of several layers of chamolis or flannel.

"Oh-you do!" said Trix, opening her eyes; "and how about yourself—don't you expect to enjoy yourself at all?"

"I would, no doubt, only—I am not going."

"Not going!" Thunderstruck, Trix repeats the words.

"No; it has been decided that I remain here. You won't miss me, Trix—you will have Captain Hammond."

"Captain Hammond may go hang himself. I want you, and you I mean to have. Let's sit down and reason this thing out. Now what new crotchet has got into your head? May I ask what your ladyship-elect means to do?"

"To remain quietly here until—until—you know."

"Oh, I know!" with indescribable scorn; "until you are raised to the sublime dignity of a baronet's wife. And you mean to mope away your existence down here for the next two months. Why, you are fading away to a shadow. You shall come up to London with us and recuperate. Charley shall take you everywhere."

She saw her wince—yes, that was where the vital place lay. Miss Stuart ran on:

"The idea of living under the same roof for two mortal months with the young man you are going to marry! You're a great stickler for etiquette—I hope you don't call that etiquette? You started with us, and you shall stay with us—you belong to us, not to him, until the nuptial knot is tied. I wouldn't give a fig for London without you. I should die of the dials in a week."

"What, Trix—with Captain Hammond?"

"Bother Captain Hammond! I want you. O Edie, do come?"

"I can't Trix." She turned away with an impatient sigh. "I have promised. Sir Victor wishes it, Lady Helena wishes it. It is impossible."

"And Edith Darrell wishes it. Oh, say it out, Edith," Trix retorted bitterly. "Your faults are many, but fear of the truth used not to be among them. You have promised. Is it that they are afraid to trust you out of their sight?"

"Let me alone, Trix. I am tired and sick—I can't bear it."

"I will let you alone, Miss Darrell. More—I will let you alone for the remainder of your life. All the past has been bad enough. Your deceit to me, your heartlessness to Charley—this is the last drop in the cup. You throw us over when we have served your turn for newer, grander friends—it is only the way of the world, and what one might expect from Miss Edith Darrell. But I didn't expect it—I didn't think ingratitude was one among your failings. I was a fool!" cried Trix, with a burst. "I always was a fool and always will be. But I'll be fooled by you no longer. Stay here, Miss Darrell, and when we say good-bye day after to-morrow, it shall be good-bye forever."

And then Miss Stuart, very red in the face, very flashing in the eyes, bounced out of the room, and Edith was left alone.

Only another friend lost forever. Well, she had Sir Victor Catheron left—he must suffice for all now.

All that day and most of the next she kept her room. It was no falsehood to say she was ill—she was. She lay upon her bed, her dark eyes open, her hands clasped over her head, looking blankly before her. To-morrow they must part, and after to-morrow—but her mind gave it up; she could not look beyond.

She came downstairs when to-morrow came to say farewell. The white wrapper she wore was not whiter than her face. Mr. Stuart shook hands in a nervous, hurried sort of way that had grown habitual to him of late. Mrs. Stuart kissed her fondly, Miss Stuart just touched her lips formally to her cheek, and Mr. Charles Stuart held her cold fingers for two seconds in his warm clasp, looked, with his own easy, pleasant smile, straight into her eyes, and said good-bye, precisely as he said it to Lady Helena. Then it was all over; they were gone; the wheels that bore them away crashed over the gravel. Edith Darrell felt as though they were crashing over her heart.

That night the Stuarts were established in elegant apartments at Langham's Hotel.

But alas for the frailty of human hopes! "The splendid time" Trix so confidently looked forward to never came. The very morning after their arrival came one of the boys in uniform with another sinister orange envelope for the head of the family. The head of the family chanced to be alone in his dressing-room. He took it with trembling hand and bloodshot eyes, and tore it open. A moment after there was a horrible cry like nothing human, then a heavy fall. Mrs. Stuart rushed in with a scream, and found her husband lying on the floor, the message in his hand, in a fit.

Captain Hammond had made an appointment, rose up expostulately out of the point lace trimmings, her arms sparkled in the lights.

In very few words he told her—the great tragedies of life are always easily told. They were ruined—he had engaged their passage by the next steamer—he had merely run down as they were never likely to meet again—for the sake of old times, to say good-bye.

Old times! Something rose in the girl's throat, and seemed to choke her. Oh, of all the base, heartless, mercenary, ungrateful wretches on earth, was there another so heartless, so ungrateful as she? Poor—Charley poor! For one moment—the impulse came upon her to give up all—to go with him to beggary if need be. Only for one moment—I will do Miss Darrell's excellent worldly wisdom this justice—only one.

"I see you are dressed for a party—I will not detain you a second longer. I could not depart comfortably, considering that you came over in our care, without informing you why we leave so abruptly. You are safe. Your destiny is happily settled. I can give to your father a good account of my stewardship. You have my sincerest wishes for your health and happiness, and I am sure you will never quite forget us. Good-bye, Miss Darrell." He held out his hand. "My congratulations are premature, but let me offer them now to the future Lady Catheron."

"Miss Darrell!" When, in all the years that were gone, had he ever called her that before? She arose and gave him her hand—proud, pale.

"I thank you," she said coldly. "I will send Lady Helena and Sir Victor to you at once. They will wish to see you, of course. Good-bye, Mr. Stuart. Let us hope things may turn out better than you think. Give my dearest love to Trix, if she will accept it. Once more, good-bye."

She swept to the door in her brilliant dress, her perfumed laces, her shining jewels—the glittering tripperies for which her womanhood was to be sold. He stood quite still in the centre of the room, as she had left him, watching her. So beautiful, so cold-blooded, as he was thinking; were all her kind like this? And poets sing and novelists rave of woman's love! A half smile came over his lips as he thought of it. It was very pretty to read of in books; in real life it was—like this!

She laid her hand on the silver handle of the door—then she paused—looked back, all the womanliness, all the passion of her life stirred to its depths. It was good-bye forever to Charley. There was a great sob, and pride bowed and fell over. She rushed back—two impetuous arms went around his neck; she drew his face down, and kissed him passionately—once—twice.

"Good-bye, Charley—my darling—forever and ever!"

She threw him from her almost violently, and rushed out of the room. Whether she went to tell Lady Helena and Sir Victor of his presence he neither knew nor cared. He was in little mood to meet either of them just then.

Five minutes later, and under the blue silvery summer night, he was whirling away back to Chester. When the midnight stars shone in the sky he was half way up to London, with Edith's farewell words in his ears, Edith's first, last kiss on his lips.

SERVANTS' CATECHISM.

The Extraordinary Interrogatories Put to a Former Employer.

Perhaps some of my lady readers will sympathize with a complaint I have had as to the number and length of the interrogations occasionally administered by ladies when inquiring as to the character of servants. Here is a sample:

Do you consider her thoroughly respectable, honest, good-natured and obliging?

Is she clean in her work and her person?

Does she dress neatly?

Does she thoroughly understand plain cooking and housework?

Is she of good height, manners and general appearance?

Kindly mention how long she was in your service, when and why she left, what character you had with her, and what wages you paid her?

Do you know what she has been doing since she left your service?

Is she quick, sensible, able to learn and an early riser?

Has she any serious faults, and will you kindly say if you consider her in any way unsuitable for a good situation?

Are you acquainted with her father

Napanee Paint Works.

For some years past Messrs. Madden & Co. have been manufacturing Japanese and Dipping Paints which have been shipped to all parts of the Dominion, and for two years past they have been making regular shipments to Great Britain. The success met with in manufacturing these lines, and believing that there is room for a strictly honest ready-mixed paint, they purchased last fall the last and most improved Paint Mills and Mixers. This machinery was placed in their factory, (formerly the premises of the Napanee Cement Co.), and have been running steady all winter. They now have ready all the latest shades in house paints, put up in all sized cans. In the preparation of their paints they use only the best lead, fine minerals, coloring material, etc. ground in and thinned with linseed oil. Their paints are for inside or outside work. Their floor paint is guaranteed to harden in ten hours. We are fortunate in having a first class reliable paint manufacturer at our doors and Madden's pure, ready-mixed paints will be in demand.

S. S. Association.

The annual meeting of the S. S. Association for Napanee and North Fredericksburgh held in the lecture room of the Presbyterian church on Thursday evening, March 28th, was well attended, and the interest manifested was gratifying and encouraging. After devotional exercises, and a brief address by the president, Dr. Bissonnette, the officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, Dr. Bissonnette; Vice Pres., Mr. A. C. Parks; Sec., J. Bowerman; Treas., Mrs. Dr. Edwards; Auditors, A. Alexander and A. E. Paul; Executive Committee, pastor and superintendent of the schools forming the Association, together with the officers of the association. The next meeting will be held in Anderson's church, North Fredericksburgh. The preview of the lesson for next quarter by Mrs. Symington was an admirable presentation, and elicited a desire that others should have an opportunity to profit by it. The association requested that the paper should be printed in pamphlet form for distribution. G. M. Elliott presented an outline blackboard sketch of a plan of "The Holy City" showing the location of important places mentioned in connection with the closing scenes of our Lord's life. In dealing with the subject Mr. Elliott showed clearly that a blackboard sketch (such as can be made by anyone) growing in presence of the class is superior for purposes of instruction, to an elaborate map which because of its multiplicity of details tends to distract the attention of the learner from the point which the teacher desires to impress. The subject "How to increase attendance of parents at the Sunday School" was introduced by O. Hinch, who suggested the appointment of visitors with specified districts allotted, who should visit the parents in their homes and urge the claims of the Sunday School and the importance of their Cooperation. A. L. Morden thought the problem would be solved if parents could be made to see that their children needed as much care and attention as their thoroughbred stock. That with a proper view of the spiritual needs of their children they would see to it. Not only that the children attended Sunday School regularly, but that they received proper teaching while there. S. Gibson mentioned the influence of Home Classes in arousing interest in the minds of the parents. The president closed the discussion by relating an anecdote of a superintendent who accounted for the large attendance by saying "We gather them in."

electro treatments, is stopping at Mrs. Scott's opposite the Court House in Napanee. He says he is prepared to treat successfully with mild currents of electro magnetism in their own homes people suffering from any of the following named diseases, colds, grip, acute catarrh, acute bronchitis, dependency, dyspepsia, nerve debility, headache, toothache, neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, sprains, wounds, bruises and rheumatism. He says he cured Arthur L. Smith, of Bold street, Hamilton, of the grip in two days, and he took no relapse, although he went to work next day, and it was cold and blustery; and that with two scientific treatments he cured a badly sprained back, and with the same number soothed a palpitating heart. His treatments are given according to the rules specified by a medical doctor who practised extensively according to allopathic rules and graduated in the School of Homeopathics, and cured thousands of people with the electricity where all his other remedies failed. Mr. McDonald can furnish good references from other place that he has visited. 18b-p

The Robinson Coy's Millinery Opening.

There is no occupation so delightful to the ladies as that of shopping, and just at this season of the year when the various firms in town are holding their spring millinery openings and more than ever vieing with one another in their display of goods, the occupation is doubly delightful to them. The Robinson Co., held their annual spring millinery opening on Saturday last and will continue it through the week. Crowds of delighted ladies from town and the surrounding country have attended it, and if the many flattering remarks passed upon the firm's display goes for anything, the large number of pretty hats and bonnets, so temptingly displayed, will adorn the faces of many of the pleased matrons and maidens that congregated to view them. An EXPRESS representative paid a visit to the Robinson Co.'s store this week, and had a look through the millinery department. On entering this store one cannot but be struck with the large stock carried by this firm. They command two large stores, which are well stocked with all lines appertaining to dry goods, the gents furnishing business, dress making, etc. Their display of millinery is indeed an entrancing vision. Their shapes are all manufactured by the firm's milliner, Miss Lee, who is a past mistress in the art. A long experience, coupled with natural good taste, has given her that finer discrimination in shaping, selecting flowers and trimming, so as to produce the happy effect of blending the various tints and colors harmoniously. The leading styles displayed are free from loudness and vulgarity, and appeal to the refined and artistic taste at once. The thought struck us that The Robinson Co.'s hats were all saleable articles, and that of itself is a good recommendation, as it is the primary motive for the display. As to the most fashionable styles this year we went fully into that in our last issue, and it is therefore unnecessary to repeat it this week. Among the many pretty designs, which embraced a number of entirely original and novel ones, that we have space to notice, was a toque, Napoleon, made of solid jet, without a brim, and trimmed with three rosettes, one in the centre of the front with a heliotrope spray, and one at each end of the broad effect, and two flowers in two different shades, yellow and heliotrope, in the back of ribbon. Another pretty Napoleon had a fancy band crown, with shirred lace brim trimmed with black tips and Napoleon blue ribbon and brown roses. A very pretty hat was an Empire, entirely square in shape, covered with apple green silk ribbon and a sherrin of black lace, with a cirrus of variegated velvet, roses large loops of ribbon 2 or 3 yard in width, forming the top brim; foliage and roses, and the under brim trimmed with fine gilt and green, make a pretty effect. A Napoleon bonnet, made of straw braid sewn together with a rolled brim, took our fancy. It was trimmed with black flowers and black tulle satin ribbon, with yellow overspreys, interwoven with the ribbon and beads of jet. A Dutch bonnet with a crown was very pretty. The shape is of solid jet, with rosettes of flowers at each corner of the front, green and heliotrope in color; there is two large fans of solid jet at each corner of the back, which is trimmed in fans of lace and ribbons. There are many other leading shapes, including misses hats, etc., we would like to mention but lack of space forbids. A visit to The Robinson Co.'s store will repay you and will speak louder an more effectively than all the descriptions we might write.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Ottawa Malcontents and the Archbishop of Ontario.

On Monday, March 25th, 1895, being the 33rd anniversary of the Archbishop's consecration, the following address was presented to His Grace after Divine Service in the Cathedral, Kingston, Ont.:

TO THE MOST REVEREND JOHN TRAVERS LEWIS, D.D., D.C.L., LORD ARCHBISHOP OF ONTARIO AND METROPOLITAN OF CANADA.

May it please Your Grace:

To-day as you commemorate the thirty-third anniversary of your consecration as Bishop of Ontario, your Clergy desirous to congratulate you most heartily upon having been spared to discharge, for so exceptionally long a period, the duties of your sacred office. Of those who were Bishops of the Anglican Communion within the limits of the British Empire at the time of your consecration, only one is now engaged in active work.

Your Grace has seen the number of your clergy grow from 55 to 135; of parishes, from 48 to 113; of congregations, from 91 to 281. Over 35,000 persons have received at your hands the Apostolic Rite of Confirmation. Besides the spiritual growth which these figures indicate, the material progress of the Church in this Diocese under Your Grace's administration has been equally marked, the number of churches having increased from 70 to 230, and of parsonage houses from 12 to 84; while the contributions to Diocesan Funds have steadily advanced from year to year throughout this whole period.

But more gratifying than even this progress has been the happy disappearance of party feeling in your Diocese and the growing unity of spirit among its clergy and laity as exemplified in Synodical and Parochial work. For many years past all have worked harmoniously together, sacrificing no principle but recognizing the duty and the benefit of united action.

It is a matter of deep regret that efforts have recently been made to destroy this unity; and we desire to express as strongly as possible our disapproval and condemnation of the means employed to accomplish this end, namely, the misrepresentation of your action in declining to be dictated to as to the terms upon which you would accept candidates for holy orders; your offence being that you yourself prescribe the conditions of acceptance instead of allowing the applicant to do so. Your Grace's practice is merely what every Bishop does, and must do if a Bishop is to have any responsibility whatever regarding candidates for ordination. They must be accepted upon some conditions, and these conditions surely are to be decided by the bishop and not by the candidate or his friends.

So far as our relation with Your Grace are concerned, there is no need to assure you of your action are being circulated throughout the Diocese, we feel that we, who know you best, ought to declare ourselves.

With every good wish and prayer for your well-being, and that of the Church under your care,

We remain your faithful Clergy,
(Signed by all the Clergy of the Diocese.)

THE ARCHBISHOP'S REPLY.

REVEREND AND DEAR BRETHREN:—It is with gratitude to Almighty God that I desire to acknowledge His great mercies to me on this day when I enter on the thirty-fourth year of my Episcopate, and also to express my thanks to you individually—my heart-felt appreciation of the kindness that has prompted your congratulatory address.

I join with you in thankfulness for the progress the Diocese has made in things spiritual and temporal, as indicated by the statistics you bring forward, and I pray that such progress may be maintained in the future, as it will assuredly be if the unity and co-operation which have hitherto made the Diocese conspicuous be not interrupted by the reckless agitation lately sprung up in Ottawa. It is a misfortune that you should feel constrained to take notice of it, but I do not see how it could have been avoided when your Bishop was so falsely and I fear maliciously slandered.

For the last two months, owing to illness and partial loss of sight, I have been unable to read or write, and therefore I was for a time ignorant of the meeting held in St. George's school house, Ottawa. At first I thought that it might have resembled that of Demetrius at Ephesus, of which St. Luke gives us this description: "Some, therefore, cried one thing and some another: for the assembly was confused; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together." But I know now that the Ottawa meeting was worse than that of Ephesus. It was a wicked attempt to impose on the dupes there assembled. The prominent charge against me was that I had said that "I never would ordain a Wycliffe student." This was a base fabrication. I never said a word or wrote a line to that effect. I am not given to making sweeping assertions or declarations of policy which I know may have to be modified or changed under changed circumstances of the future. If the rioters at the meeting had charged me with the following misdemeanor they would have been strictly accurate, viz., that I withstood the insolent demand of a priest in Ottawa that I should admit to examination for Holy Orders three years hence a candidate of his selection on his conditions and not on mine. His followers, no doubt, are ignorant that it is the prerogative of all Bishops to ordain on their own conditions, not on those of irresponsible friends of candidates for Holy Orders,—a prerogative I am not likely to resign at the bidding of a meeting which has shocked every right-minded Christian.

It may be well to make plain to you my attitude towards Wycliffe College. Up to the present time I have never made any public statement on the subject, nor exhibited the least hostility to the college, though I never viewed its establishment with favour. Ever since I could reason on such subjects I disliked the multiplication of small theological seminaries. I believe that they begot narrowness which ends in bigotry. This is inevitable when young men of a certain theological stripe are hived together to be moulded to order by professors as narrow as themselves. The policy of the first Bishops of Canada, like Bishop Mountain and Strachan, was to consolidate the strength of the Church on the establishment of one or two great Universities where Theological students should be educated in the same buildings with students in Arts, as in the great Universities in England and Ireland. This course of action, if adopted, would ensure less bigotry, able professors, larger libraries and more spacious buildings. Wycliffe College, being an additional Theological Seminary, and in my opinion quite unnecessary, was therefore regarded by me with disfavour, especially by reason of the object sought to be attained by its erection, which was avowedly the overthrow of Trinity University, and by the use of means which I shall not mention as I wish to avoid controversy.

I have been identified with Trinity College from the day of its foundation. I know its full history, I have fought its battles, and by virtue of seniority of consecration am now the Chairman of its Corporation. Is it not then too much to ask of even archiepiscopal good nature that I should view with equal esteem and favour a College intended to spring into popularity out of the ruins of Trinity College?

But this is not the only ground for my own Lectures, a book characterized by my dear friend the late Bishop of Lincoln in my hearing as a gross perversion of the object sought to be attained by the founder of those lectures, the Rev. John Hampton. I also object to it as an authorized "book of reference" for candidates for Holy Orders.

But further, I disagree with a great deal of the theological teaching given in Wycliffe College. I give as an illustration the following passage taken from the Calendar of the College. Among the "Distinctive Principles" of this College is "An Historical Episcopate traceable to Apostolic direction, as conducive to THE WELL BEING but not necessary to THE BEING of the Church." This I believe to be a fiction without a particle of support from the New Testament, primitive antiquity, or the Book of Common Prayer. It is a device manufactured by well-meaning but puzzle-headed people in order to escape from the dilemma of unchurched sects. But the device is insulting. It seems to say to those that are not members of the Church: "You have an existence, it is true, but not a good one. You are in what is called the ESE of a Church, but not the BENE ESE,"—just as if the Apostles had transmitted to us a choice of Churches of various grades of orthodoxy—as if the Catholic Church was like a railway train made up of first and second-class carriages—and as if any sensible Christian would not prefer to be a member of a body that had a good constitution, to remaining a member of one that had merely a claim to existence! Now I do not believe a word of this figment, and I prefer that those ordained by me should disbelieve it also.

It is very painful to me to be forced to enter upon this subject at all. My intention has always been to let Wycliffe College alone to work out its own future. I have felt and still feel that it may be destined to do good. Candidates for Holy Orders, trained there, or some of them, will no doubt revieve opinions gained there when they have had more experience and a wider range of reading, instances of which are not wanting. For this and other reasons it was my desire to say nothing to its disparagement; but the provocation has been too great to permit me to be silent. The insults offered to myself would not have elicited a remark from me, but I must notice those offered to our brethren in Ottawa. When men of high standing and long service in the Church like Archdeacon Lauder and Rural Deans Bogert and Pollard, are hissed down because they manfully endeavored to say a word in defence of their absent bishop, a righteous anger must be felt. I tender to them my sympathy and promise them my firm support. They may have to withstand further opposition from the organization that has been framed to perpetuate discord; but they may rest assured that the good sense of the Church of England will never allow a club of self-constituted theologians, either in Ottawa or elsewhere, to regulate the affairs of the Church by usurping the functions of our General and Provincial Synods, and substituting for the canons and immemorial usages of the church the resolutions of intimidation meetings where freedom of speech is not permitted and Evangelical religion is caricatured.

Meanwhile let us continue in the old paths and work on in faith: and, as that really Evangelical prelate, the Bishop of Winchester, said when threatened with an action at law by a candidate whom he rejected for his ignorance, "I sleep in peace." Believe me ever yours affectionately in the bonds of the Church.

WORST KIND OF DYSPESIA.

GENTLEMEN,—I write to inform you that for years I had been troubled with Dyspepsia, and having tried other remedies which entirely failed, I at last found relief and cure in Burdock Blood Purifier, of which I took two bottles, the result being a perfect cure. Although only a young lad I had been troubled with Dyspepsia for four or five years, but I can say now that B. B. does its work faithfully in the worst kind of Dyspepsia, and has proved itself the only cure for me.
